Sugar-glider

Where do I live?

I live in open forests on the edge of the rainforest. I rarely come down to the ground. I spend the day sleeping in leafy nests in hollows in big, old trees.

Why do I live here?

We're very social animals, and I share my nest with up to 12 others. If someone disturbs us, we make a loud chattering noise to scare them off.

What do I eat?

I have a sweet tooth – I lap up flower nectar, and eat insects and spiders. We chisel grooves in the bark of the trees with our sharp teeth, then lap the sap.

What eats me?

Kookaburras, owls and goannas. Cats and dogs also might try to eat me.

Any adaptations?

I can glide 50 metres between trees. I have a flap of loose skin from the fifth finger of my hand to the first toe of my foot. It really helps to get around, and to escape from being eaten! I use scent to mark my territory and help my family recognise me. I have pointed claws to help me hold onto branches (except on my big toe). My lovely long tail also helps.

Relationships

My friend the Fluffy Glider (also called the Yellow-bellied Glider) has powerful teeth and cuts into the tough trunk of Red Stringybark trees. They let us share the sweet sap.

Rainforest Wild Real Estate

FOR SALE

At the edge of the rainforest
A beautiful leafy nest with great views
One owner, a family of clean, particular, sugar gliders

This comfortable, sweet smelling, well appointed home is nestled in a large hollow in one of the oldest trees in the area.

Nearby trees offer plenty of gliding opportunities for the family.

It is a large, one roomed dwelling which will comfortably house a family of up to 15.

Far away from local development, it is safe from wicked cats and dogs.

Nearby are several Red Stringybark trees making shopping for food simple and quick.

There is a family of friendly yellow bellied gliders nearby which cut into the trees with their extra strong teeth making it easier for us to get the sap!!!

HURRY for your chance to get into the Real Estate Market. This one won't last long.
